DAMASCUS — President Hafez
al-Assad of Syria, defying the concerns of his Arab neighbors and supporters, has developed an unusual new political and economic agreement with the revolutionary Islamic government of Iran.

The accord estranges this key Arab nation from its brethren at a crucial moment of readjustment following Egypt's recovery of the Sinai Peninsula and a widely expected new push to involve other Arabs in Egyptian efforts to press the Camp David autonomy negotiations and resume a role in the

in the area must take into consideration the position of Syria," In-formation Minister Ahmed Iskander said in an interview.

The most visible part of the new relationship is a commercial protocol signed by Foreign Minister Ab-dul Halim Khaddam during a visit in March to Tehran. Under the deal, Syria is to receive about 8 million tons of Iranian oil a year for use in its refineries at Homs and Banias. The Iranian crude costs as little as $23 a barrel — far below the $34 benchmark of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries - on exceptionally soft credit terms, diplomatic sourc-

$24-Billion Debt

The Syrian shut-off thus is cer-tain to add to Iraq's mounting eco-nomic problems, diplomats in Damascus say. Mr. Hussein's gov-ernment already is about $24 billion in debt to Saudi Arabia, Kuwait, Ostar and the United Arab Emirates, which have provided loans to finance the Iraqi war

Several Risks

Diplomatic sources say, however, that Mr. Assad is running several risks with his new policy. Damascus on April 13 to express concern about the pipeline cutoff.
"Mr. Assad told him to bug off," a Western diplomat recalled. "He wouldn't even discuss the subject." Perhaps an even greater risk, however, is the final outcome of a possible Iraqi defeat at Iranian bands. Although Mr. Assad would be rid of his longtime rival, some diplomats express doubt that whatever Iraqi government emerged would necessarily be favorable to Syria. The end result could be a Shiite revolutionary regime similar to that of Iran, and bostile to the secular Ba'athist philosophy of Mr. Assad's 12-year-old rule in

It was directed chiefly at a call by Claude Labbé, the Gaullist floor leader in the National Assembly, for Mr. Mitterrand's resignation, and at former Interior Minister Christian Bonnet's denunciation of Justice Minister Robert Badinter. # An Arab Girl Is Killed By Israelis at School During Gaza Protests

New York Times Service

JERUSALEM --- An 18-year-old Arab girl was shot and killed Tuesday and another teen-ager was wounded when Israeli troops clashed with demonstrators in the occupied Gaza Strip.

An army spokesman said the in-cident occurred after a patrol, passing by the Al-Awda school in Khan Yunis, saw 10 masked men in the schoolyard, who they said were pressing girls to go into the street and demonstrate. The patrol entered the schoolyard, the spokesman said, arrested two of the men and ordered the students to disperse.

This set off protests as the girls entered the street and began throwing stones, cinder blocks, chairs and tables at the four soldiers, according to the army's account. Shots were fired in the air, and then into the crowd. Two girls were hit, one 18 and one 16.

The 18-year-old, identified by Arah sources as Ihsan Ahn Daraz, was hit in the chest, the army spokesman said. Arabs said the bullet entered her back. Her death brought to 14 the number of Arabs killed hy Israelis since demonstrations crupted in the occupied territories in March.

A leading politician acknowledged that Mr. Mubarak's attempts to be "all things to all Egyptians" in the aftermath of the Sadat assassination worked for a while, allaying fears of collapse and anarchy in the country, but that the post-Sinai period augurs a "battle for the soul and the ear of Muharate"

He was referring to the many strains in Egyptian life - to pow-erful politicians in the ruling National Democratic Party who fear that major change will disrupt their own secure posts, to those millions living marginal existences who want many improvements in their lot, and to the adherents of Moslem fundamentalism opposed to the secular bent of the government and whose voices are not unbeard by the legions of deprived

At home, Mr. Mubarak's chief problem is the economy. Exports have long since outstripped imports and the trade deficit for 1980-1981 was $4.2 billion, a 10percent increase over the previous

Reagan Is Said to Plan Statement Backing School-Prayer Measure

WASHINGTON — President Reagan plans to announce his support of a proposed constitutional amendment authorizing volimtary group prayer in public schools, according to White House and congressional aides.

Mr. Reagan plans to make the announcement Thursday, which be has proclaimed National Day of Prayer. A senior White House official said Monday that Mr. Reagan would probably recommend precise wording for the proposed amendment rather than simply express his support for one or more of several such measures already introduced in Congress.

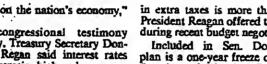

Proponents of school-sponsored prayer have pressed for a constitutional amendment for two decades, since the Supreme Court held in 1962 that organized prayer in the public schools was unconstitutional. Congress has rejected such proposals five times.

In its 1962 decision, and in a 1963 ruling outlawing organized

Bible readings in the schools, the court based its decision on the First Amendment clause barring "an establishment of religion" by Congress. The court has not forbidden voluntary silent prayers or meditation in classrooms. Details were not available on how the amendment would express conservatives' views that group prayer ought to be allowed in classrooms. The senior White House official said that the White House policy staff was now drafting the proposed amendment, which would require approval by Congress and ratification by 38 states to become part of the Constitution.

In his 1980 campaign, Mr. Reagan drew strong support from conservative Christian groups by declaring his opposition to court decisions banning prayer in public schools. "Of all their new right issues," said a Republican congressional aide, "it's the strongest. About 85 percent of the people are for it. You can't hurt yourself

"I still believe this is the best approach to the problems that this country has," he said. "I don't think senior citizens will resist a one-year freeze because it would practically assure the solvency of the fund."

Sen. Domenici said he outlined his proposals to other Republican leaders and to President Reagan during a White House meeting Monday. Although little support was expressed, Sen. Domenici said, "No one said, 'Don't present it,

Drive Develops in Congress to Revive SALT-2

New York Times Service

WASHINGTON - Several members of both houses of Congress and some former high government officials, spurred by the campaign to halt the growth of nuclear arsenals, are pressing for a revival of the 1979 strategic arms

Three members of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, which opened hearings last Thursday on how to slow the nuclear arms race, have called for Senate approval of the treaty, also known

Sen. Charles H. Percy, Republican of Illinois and chairman of the committee, said then that although ratification would raise "difficult questions," a "less formal and pos-sibly less divisive mechanism for keeping the current de facto restrictions in place would be Renewed interest in the treaty is one of many congressional re-sponses to public calls for arms control. About 25 resolutions bave been introduced in Congress on reducing Soviet and U.S. atomie arsenals and preventing a nuclear war by accident or miscalculation. The Foreign Relations Committee, attempting to produce a compro-mise measure for Senate debate, is examining 10 proposals.

The Reagan administration has been abiding by the terms of the treaty but opposes efforts to for-malize its observance. President Reagan vigorously opposed the treaty during his election cam-paign, and his administration plans to present its own proposal soon for sharply reducing U.S. and Soviet strategic forces.

Afghan Intervention

The treaty, which limits strategic offensive weapons, was signed by the United States and Soviet Union in June, 1979, but was never approved by the Senate. President Jimmy Carter asked early in 1980 that the Senate stop considering the accord after the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan in December, 1979, donmed prospects for Senate approval.

While many senators privately doubt that the treaty would receive the two-thirds majority required for Senate ratification, a growing number of arms control and military specialists have urged the revival of the accord as an interim arms control measure that could take effect quickly.

Former Defense Secretary Har-old Brown and James R. Schlesinger, who served in key posts in the Nixon, Ford and Carter administrations, urged Friday that the treaty be re-examined. Even a former critic, Sen. Sam Nunn, Democrat of Georgia, said Friday that he would "look positively" on an effort to revive the accord.

Among the initiatives the Foreign Relations Committee is considering is a proposal by Sen. Henry M. Jackson, Democrat of Washington, and Sen. John W. Warner; Republican of Virginia, that has been endorsed by the administra-tion. It would permit a continued ready endorsed. If in force, they tion. It would permit a continued military buildup while the administration negotiated arms reduc-

Though Soviet leaders have repeatedly expressed interest in a summit meeting, there is no sign that they took seriously the offer of a meeting in New York. The imponderable in the behind-the-seenes maneuvering about the summit is Mr. Brezhnev's health. Administration officials privately acknowledge that they do not know whether the So-viet leader would be able to withstand the rigors of either a trip to New York or an October summit week when the Reagan administration cast one of four votes against the Law of the Sea, which U.S. diplomacy belped initiate. This ambitious charter aims to bring barmony out of discordant territorial claims and remove from legal limbo the seabed wealth of copper, nickel, cobalt and manganese.

The treaty is a rare accommodation of global interests and ideologies, striking innumerable practical bargains. As the final vote showed, no bloc prevailed: 130 in favor, four against with 17 abstentions -- including Britain and West Germany in deference to Washington and the Soviet bloc hoping for better economic terms.

Eight years of diplomacy is thus frustrated and the Law of the Sea is left even more confused than ever.

Paradoxically, this attempt to transcend dogma ran into an ideological barrier in Washington. The Reagan administration said that the treaty amounted to an economic giveaway and that its legal terms were superfluous, since the United States would claim them in any case.

On these very counts, bowever, the ments argued for the treaty. As the negotiators of four U.S. administrations wanted, it guarantees passage through strategic straits, and creates a uniform 12-mile (19-kilometer) limit on territorial waters and an additional 200-mile "exclusive" economic zone. Once ratified, it is said, these norms will become part of "customary" law and therefore applicable to all countries, including those who do not sign. But these terms were

A great venture came to a sour climax last the result of many compromises that included new rules for sea mining. They will not be cheerfully granted to non-signers who want to pick and cboose.

What rankled the Reagan administration was the idea that seabed mining would be managed by an international authority, licensing private mining consortiums and cutting itself in on the profits. Washington resented this concession to nations that would otherwise never get at the sea's wealth.

Yet, ironically, some kind of agreement would actually benefit private U.S. miners. They, and the banks that lend them money, want clear title to seabed wealth. As long as that title is clouded, they are unlikely to make the heavy investments required. On this sensible ground, even some administration officials gradually modified their bostility. But not enough.

Others seized on blemishes in the charter and even exaggerated them. They raised some valid questions about technology transfers and procedures for amending the treaty - issues that might have been compromised io a different atmosphere.

No nation can come away fully satisfied from a negotiation involving 150. It is difficult to believe even now that further negotiations are impossible before more than 100 sign the accord in December. Without the assent of the United States and a few other major sea powers, the treaty can actually become a new source of strife. A farsighted administration would not now abandon such a worthy vessel.

The Generals' Dilemma

British forces appear to be taking relentless control of the air over the Falklands and the seas around them. This sharpens the principal question facing Argentina's generals, By seizing the Falkland Islands, they committed a political blunder assuring that they would not receive assistance even from the few countries that might be inclined to offer at least rhetorical support. They may have committed a military blunder as well. The Argentine forces are now being cut up and isolated. How do the generals mean to get their country out of this fix?

They are caught between the military facts, which counsel a diplomatic settlement, and the political facts at home, which indicate that the honor of the military, or at least the tenure of the current leaders, may not survive a settlement. What a pity that the generals failed to contemplate that dilemma before April 2, when the Falklands were invaded. It is a typical mistake of a dictatorship that has deprived itself of the democratic mechanisms of debate and inquiry.

No outsider can be sure how the generals will resolve their dilemma. Will the losses goad them to stay in battle and refuse accommodation? Or could these losses possibly be portrayed as the price a brave nation paid to defend its bonor against overwhelming odds? There is an element of mystique in Argentina's politics, and on this may depend the response to Britain's methodical Anglo-Saxon tightening of the screws.

Regrettably, Argentina rejected the mediation being offered by Peru's president, Fernando Belaunde Terry, over the weekend. That put the generals in the foolish position of turning away from a Latin initiative, one made by a statesman who in no way can be characterized as a U.S. puppet.

Fortunately, there are signs that some of the leaders in Buenos Aires remain interested in the Belaunde initiative. That would seem to offer Argentina what bope exists for minimizing the damage it did to itself by its heedless aggression.

Ever diligent in alerting its readers to the depredations of the capitalist system and the exploitation of the U.S. working class, the Soviet press bas now cast a cold eye on McDonald's, a "cafe," writes an Izvestia correspondent from some unnamed site in deepest California, "specializing in selling sandwiches with meat patties."

The reason for the fast-food chain's success, he writes, is that it makes its young employees "work in a wild rbythm." But no matter how vigorously they whirl and stomp as they dish up burgers and fries, the workers can't beat the system. That's because their company-issued uniforms bave no pockets in which "to hide tips." Indeed, the company seizes all tips because it wants "all the earnings up to the last cent."

A call to the McDonald's people confirmed that their uniforms have no pockets - they're neater that way - but that part about tips puzzled them, and us. Maybe we've been unfairly cheating wildly rhythmic young workers all these years, but we have never tipped at McDonald's or any other fast-food place, and we have never seen anyone else oo so. Who's to tip? The girl at the cash register? The kid with the mon?

Why A. Palladin chose to say nothing about the quality and availability of food at McDonald's is obvious. Russians who have to stand in line for hours to buy food would not think better of their system if they were reminded how things are elsewhere.

Despite their sensitivity, the Soviets may be making a mistake in badmouthing American fast-food restaurants. The smarter thing to do would be to invite them in. That would belp alleviate food shortages, while the treasury would benefit from a share of the filthy profits. The government could even keep all the tips.

To be sure, American chains would probably have to alter their names somewbat to blend in with the local culture. Commissar Sanders and his Crimean Fried Chicken

With recent air raids and the sinking of warships, the Falklands conflict has gone far enough. WASHINGTON - Nothing is more generally believed than the cry of the "yellow" Socialist press that the wealth of the United States is being rapidly concentrated. An examination of the Massachusetts Surrogate records from 1829-1831 will show that there was actually more concentration of wealth io 1829 than in 1906. In 1848 John Jacob Astor was worth $25 million. being the richest man in the nation. His wealth then was a much larger slice of the total wealth of the nation than is the wealth of John D. Rockefeller today. Again, the increase in the number of Astors has been much more rapid than the increase in wealth; the average wealth of each Aster today is about $10 million.

1932: Not More, but Better

NEW YORK - Returning from a world cruise, Prof. Henry F. Osborn, president of the American Museum of Natural History, declared that a "wise and judicious depression" in the world's birthrate would solve the problem of the world's economic depression. At every port he visited, he said, overpopulation, overproduction and unemployment were evident. "I return impressed with the principle of not more, but better representatives of every race. This is true for the American nation as well as foreign stocks." Prof. Osborn described himself as an adherent of the theories of Sir Francis Galton on selective breeding and described Bertrand Russell and Mrs. Margaret Sanger as "propagandists."

Yet the whole story deserves more publicity than it got.

as such to a major Western firm. The Western firm sold the caviar at its market value and shared the millions of dollars in profits with its Soviet accomplices, placing the funds in Swiss bank accounts. From time to time, top-ranking Soviet civil servants would travel to the West to spend what they could from those accounts.

All Soviet citizens know that the death penalty can be applied for economic crimes, just as they know the extent of corruption that has become a fact of life in Soviet society. The death penalty for corruption, made legal under Stalin in 1932, was abolished and re-established several times, but never really ceased being applied.

By Leopold Unger

It was most frequently used during the great famine of the 1950s and beginning of the 1960s, when Nikita Khrushchev applied it mostly against Jews who had sought to emigrate. It is now used against about 500 people a year. Most are convicted murderers or Nazi collaborators. rubles (about $3 million.) Y.A. Kobakahidze, a former district president in Soviet Georgia, was executed in June, 1981, for receiving bribes for favored housing allotments. In spite of this dire punishmen corruption has never disappeared from everyday Soviet life. The permanent state of scarcity and the low levels of salaries have led to a situation in which everyone tries to get something more out of any deal that is made; the institution of the wziatka, as baksheesh is known in the Soviet Union, has become the norm.

Although corruption is rampant at all levels of Soviet society, infor-mation on prosecution and punishment for bribery had been restricted to that concerning small-time racketeers. When, for example, Vasili M. Javanadze, a former first secretary of Georgia and a member of the Politburo in Moscow. was fired for corruption and replaced by his former KGB chief, Eduard Tchevarnadze, nothing on the affair was printed in the Soviet press, although at least 50,000 peo-ple were arrested in the subsequent police investigation and roundup. When Ekaterina Furtseva, a former minister of culture, was dis-missed for similar reasons (a luxurious villa built at the taxpayers' expense), she was discreetly retired under the best of conditions.

Thus, the publicity surrounding the Rytov affair, limited as it was, is an innovation, and an indication that the middle level of the ruling caste can be called to justice. It is all the more interesting since the public announcement of Rytov's execution came after a series of scandals and rumors that affected the Moscow Nomenklatura.
These included the dismissal of

Gen. Konstantin Zotov, a former head of the passport bureau, and the mysterious death of Gen. Semyon Tsvigun, a deputy minis-ter of the interior and brother-inlaw of Leonid Brezhnev. The gen-eral reportedly killed himself just society.

Statistics concerning economic crimes and the extent of corruption are state secrets in the Soviet Umon. The examples made public are always presented as individual cases, totally independent from any other, so it is difficult to link the cases and form any idea of the importance of this national scourge. According to the human rights activist Andrei Sakharov corruption affects about 10 percent of the Soviet gross national product. This would be a buge fig-ure, but not an impossible one.

There are several signs indicatng that the situation is very se rious. The press has recently taken to publishing news of public trials: Last September, the criminal code was altered to increase the penalty for corruption, and in November a confidential letter from the party. Central Committee on the subject of corruption was read at closeddoor meetings of local party cells. In January, a new deputy minis-ter was assigned to the Depar-ment of the Interior: Boris Zabotin, who until then had been head of the anti-corruption department.

It was Lt. Gen. Yuri Churbanov, the chief minister of the Interior Ministry police, who announced the promotion of Zabotin. Tchurbanov is the husband of Galina. Brezhnev's daughter, whose name was often mentioned in the recent rumors about scandals in Moscow.

Officially, repression should be able to get rid of corruption, which is nothing more than a cancer on the otherwise healthy body of So-cialism and the remainder of a bourgeois mentality that has disap-peared in the Soviet Union. # Severe Third World Debt Problem Puts IMF in Quandary

ONDON - Not since 1975, in the wake of the first great oil price rise, has the deht problem of the Third World looked so fraught with danger. The commercial banks, which are desperately trying to overcome the near defaults of their East European borrowers and now the complications of the British freeze on new lending to Argentina, are not well placed to receive the coming shocks from the Third World, Does this mean the International Monetary Fund will have to undergo a revolution of similar magnitude to its 1980 revolution?

In 1979 the Iranian crisis sent oil prices soaring again. To the devel-oping countries that had managed to survive the first oil price in-crease, it looked as if the only way to survive the second would be to reduce their economic growth to zero, with all the consequences that such a move would pose for political stability in numerous combustible corners of the world. The IMF, it was argued then, was fueling the flames in telling devel-oping countries that they must tighten their belts, devalue, and control the money supply.

What was worse, said the critics, who included not just Third World countries but the banks, who felt dangerously overexposed, was that the IMF was being repaid more than it was lending to the Third World. Between 1974 and 1980 the IMF had provided a miserly 3 per-cent of the developing countries' financing requirements.

The chorus of criticism was too widespread to be ignored. It is to the great credit of the IMF's managing director, Jacques de Laro-sière, and the Carter administration that the IMF changed course, dramatically. In the short span of 16 months, starting in early 1980, the IMF made new loan commitments of $15 billion, virtually all to developing countries. This was more than the total it had lent over the previous seven years.

The fund was able to step up its lending so sharply because it was relatively liquid, partly because the industrial countries had not needed to draw on IMF resources and partly because when its coffers began to run dry it pulled off the coup of persuading Saudi Arabia to lend it some $10 billion.

The IMF also loosened up the terms of its loans, its so-called "conditionality," and dropped many of the economy-wrenching conditions it had traditionally demanded, Devaluation, draconian hudget cuts and a forced rise to demestic interest rates men domestic interest rates were no longer the inevitable quid pro quo. Repayment periods were significantly lengthened as well.

All this was going into effect just when the Reagan administration came into office. When a ma-jor loan went to Pakistan, U.S. Treasury Undersecretary Beryl Sprinkel told the Wall Street Journal, "We want to push IMF's con-ditionality back to where it was." billion to India, the United States abstained on the vote and implied that, the next time, it would vote against.

The mood at IMF besignariers is now returning to its traditional caution. Yet the debt situation has never looked so bad, not even in 1979. Developing countries' reserves as a proportion of their imports are almost back to the low levels of 1975. There is a worryingly large number of countries with reserves less than the value of three months' imports, which is widely thought in banking circles to be the minimum acceptable level.

And 1982 is not 1975. In 1976 the world economy was well on its way to recovery and the developing countries exported their way out of trouble. Today the recession appears to be deepening, world trade is contracting and commodity prices have plummeted. Of course, on the positive side, oil prices have fallen; yet a 1-percent change in interest rates causes more impact than does a 1-percent change in oil prices.

The Reagan administration's decision to tolerate high interest rates is imposing crippling burdens on Third World dehtors. This anti-inflationary strategy keeps the London interbank rate at closer to 20 percent than 10, making a differ-ence of as much as $13 billion in interest payments in a single year.

By Jonathan Power

The IMF is in a quandary. If the U.S. economy does not turn around soon, if interest rates stay high and if the world economy continues to contract, a number of developing countries will not be able to avoid default — with all that this implies for the stability of the banking system. On the other hand, if the economic clouds are so black that it is difficult to see improvement, should the IMF be nding out money without the clear certainty of repayment?

Already the IMF is finding that a number of its African borrowers are giving it great cause for worry. But many observers think the fund has no choice - it has to engage in another revolutionary step. It must consider a new allocation of special drawing rights (the IMF's own line of credit) of perhaps as much as $10 billion, and increase its quotas by 50 percent to improve the fund's holdings of usable foreign currencies for lending.

In the next few months this debate is going to surface. So far it has taken a back seat as bankers have worried about their Polish and Romanian loans and the course of President Reagan's economic management. Yet the developing countries' time bomb is ticking away, and if a remedy does not appear soon — either a break-through to the U.S economy or an IMF initiative — there is going to be quite an explosion.

Private Sector Role

Regarding the article by Claudia Wright, "New U.S. Aid to Tunisia: Seeds of Disaster" (IHT, March 17): President Reagan's obsessive preoccupation with the security problems in the developing countries is more likely to undermine the security of these countries, whose difficulties mainly stem from economic problems. While insisting on the private sector to play major role in development assistance, the U.S. administration has stepped up government mili-tary assistance. Why not let the private sector take up the role of arms suppliers, which they are doing with great success in some cases, and the U.S. government concentrate on pressing domestic issues? In any case, America would do a great favor to developing countries by not supplying arms to these fragile economies. The same

To obtain this political stranglebold on the next generation's econ-omy, Third World countries offered industrial nations confirmation of what custom had already given them: free passage through straits. That was a borrendous blunder, which would have opened the way to a self-financed supernational authority that could rewrite the rules 20 years later, taking over completely without further U.S. Senate ratification. At the 11th hour, with Reagan in place, the U.S. government woke up. Basic principles were be-gence and self-importance, Up-slike has already received the Na-cional Book Critics Circle and the Pulitzer fiction awards. Only the PEN/Faulkner Award, which in its brief existence has made a concentrated effort to be "different," has einded Updike.

Had all this praise gone to one of Updike's earlier books— "Rabbit, Run," or "Bech: A Book," or even "Couples" — it would have been cause for celebration. But Updike's earlier and vastly better books went almost entirely unnoticed by the people who make it their business to

Plenty of Precedent

This of course is not without precedent. Fankner got no Pul-itzer for "Absalom! Absalom!" (it wont that year to "Gone With the Wind"), but received one almost two decades later for the gassily unreadable "A Fable." Ditto for Hemingway, who was passed over for "The Sun Also Rises" but, also almost two decades later, was granted one for The Old Man and the Sea," a work of monumental fatnousness. Institutions that give awards tend to be conservative and to climb aboard literary bandwagons only after their for-ward progress has halted. In Updike's case it is to be hoped that is not the case; he has just this year turned 50, after all, which is far too early an age for a writer to run out of gas - even if he has written, in "Rabbit Is Rich" about an America running out of gas, But there can be little question that "Rabbit Is Rich" is on almost every count an inferior piece of work.

Like "Rabbit Redux," "Rabbit Is Rich" exists less for the creation of characters and social textures — at which Updike can be superbly skilled — than for the elaboration of Updike's political and social viewpoints. He is under the mistaken impression that he has interesting things to say in these departments, and he says them in a loud, insistent voice. "Rabbit Is Rich" is a novel of pushy, intrusive topicality, serving up Updike's opinions on everything from Jimmy Carter's jogging to the gas lines to Skylab; it's fiction as an op-ed ge, and it doesn't work as either. A typical passage: "On the news, there is rioting in Levittown over gasoline, peo-ple are throwing beer bottles full of gasoline; they explode, it looks like old films of Vietnam or Budapest but it is Levittown right down the road, north of Philadelphia. A striking trucker is shown holding up a sign saying TO HELL WITH SHELL And Three-Mile Island leaking radioactive neutrons just down the road in the other direction. The weather for tomorrow looks good, as a massive high continues to dominate from the Rocky Mountain region eastward all the way to Maine. Time for bed."

Which is where all good Updike characters go when, as it almost always does, the spirit moves them. In "Rabbit Is Rich" Updike is trying to write about the contrast between middleaged sexual desire and middleaged sexual performance, but he smothers a legitimate subject and some legitimate ideas about it under a great weight of gratui-tous (and, in my stuffy view, tasteless) sexual detail, Indeed, "Rabbit Is Rich" reeks of vulgarity. Updike fancies him-self the chronicler of the common man, and he fills page after page with the most clinical evi-dence of that fellow's gaucheric. So far as I can determine, he also lieves that he portrays the common man with sympathy and understanding. Yet what come through most vividly are Updike's condescension and contempt, Gazing down from his acrie north of Boston, he sees

The entire deep space of the room, which Webb added on when he and Cindy acquired this house in the pace-setting development of Brewer Heights, gently brims with appointments chosen all to harmonize. Its tawny wallpaper has vertical threads of texture in it like the vertical folds of the slightly darker pull drapes, and reproductions of Wyeth watercolors lit by spots on track lighting overhead echo with scratchy strokes the same tints, and the same lighting reveals little sparkles, like mica on a beach, in the overlapping arcs of the rough-plastered ceiling."

Prejudices of the Literati

If that doesn't make you feel superior, nothing will. Beneath poor ordinary man trying to find meaning in his life, "Rabbit Is Rich" is one extended sneer at American values as embraced by that very same ordinary man. Which gets us to one possible ex-planation for the awards with which it is now festooned: It expresses, in a culturally acceptable fashion, the political and social prejudices of the literati. In allows the reader, just as it allows the anthor, to pretend to be dem-ocratic while simultaneously turning up his nose at democratic man. The novel is a masquerade in which the reader is invited to participate.

At the same time, it offers the upper-middle-class reader the chance to go slumming, a diver-sion in which the intellectually as son in which the intellectually as well as the financially privileged take unflagging pleasure. What could be more gratifying than to wallow around in — while carefully keeping one's distance from — a world of tacky people who live in tacky houses filled with tacky furniture, who watch tacky the evision shows and eat tacky television abows and eat tacky food while thinking tacky thoughts? And it's all so jammed with details - brand names and song titles and headlines - that you're just as sure as sure can be that Updike has penetrated to the very heart of American darkness. It seems not to have occurred to anyone that he has penetrated to nothing more substantial than the heart of his own

But all of this is after the fact. The awards have been handed ont, and "Rabbit Is Rich" has been handed over to the ages. nothing except tackiness; The hunch here is that they will take one look at it and bar the ture of its moment and, more to

Lino Brocka's '75 'Manille' Outshines Delon and Deneuve

By Thomas Quinn Curtiss International Herald Tribune

DARIS - Alain Delon is on the I wrong side of the law once more in "Le Choc." This time he is a hired killer who longs to retire. but his goonish bosses steal his blood-money savings from his safe-deposit box to force him to continue his dirty work.

The only novelties this edition supplies are an excursion to a turkey farm in which the paid assassin has invested and a frisky kitten that disarms by a sudden leap one of the hatchetman's many enemies.

Delon is an attractive personality, remaining among the French cinema's top drawing cards. He has been in far better films — Visconti's "The Leopard" and Losey's "Mr. Klein" — but his form prefer him either as a nimble fans prefer him either as a nimble police inspector or as a disillusioned gangster. This time he has Catherine Deneuve, the blonde re-frigerator, as his girlfriend, and Stephane Audran as his rattled financial adviser.

"Manifle," the 1975 film of the Philippine director, Lino Brocka, displays the superior intelligence and touch of a poet that are the qualities that transform his characters from common screen puppets into recognizable human beings.

His story is that of a young boy from a fishing village come to the capital to face harsh experiences and disappointments. Brocka vividly draws the metropolis with its frantic bustle, exotic colors and dark underside, but - and here lies his extraordinary ability -- he succeeds without resort to the ex-pected sentimentalities of his rivals, in revealing the vague, puzzled inner spirit of his youthful protagonist, beautifully played by Rafael Roco Jr. This "Manila" of Brocka is a cinematic achievement of a high and difficult order.

"Queen Lear" of Mokhtar Chorfi is a nonesuch exercise in the peculiar. Its inspiration would seem to have been the technique of the Luis Buffuel-Salvador Dali "L'Age d'Or," a pioneering effort in cine-matic surrealism. A collection of unrelated and confusing sequences, it hints of the Oedipus-Jocasta incest rather than the Shakespeare tragedy. Joe Dalles-sandro, the body beautiful of Andy Warhol movies, spends much time in bathing shorts by the sea and on the sea and is also disclosed irrelevantly as what appears to be King Lear's fool.

Jean-Pierre Mocky has directed this lackluster expose of the parliamentary milieu in which an aging minister becomes worried over the skeletons in his closet. Jacques Dutrone is a smirking, blackmailing press photographer, Michel Galabru does a broad burlesque of a lumpenproletariat and Jacqueline Maillan is a deranged housekeeper. A more repugnant set of dramatis personae would be difficult to imagine. # A Cobbled-Together Opera at Schwetzingen

By James Helme Sutcliffe

International Herald Tribune

CHWETZINGEN, West Germany — Schwetzingen is a tiny town near Heidelberg renowned for its luscious asparagus and a lovely palace with Versailles-like gardens. Every spring an inti-mate music festival is held in the palace and its wings, with every-thing from solo recitals to orchestral concerts, opera and drama.

Sponsored by the South German Radio in Stuttgart, the festival, now in its 31st year, has made a specialty of commissioning small-scale operas for the palace's jewel of a Rococo theater, built in 1752. There is only one condition; the opera must be based on a fairy-tale subject, as befits the fantastic nature of the palace gardens.

This year's festival, which runs to May 20, opened with the world premiere of Udo Zimmermann's Die Wundersame Schustersfrau (The Cobbler's Wonderful Wife), based on a fantasy by Federico Garcia Lorca. It was the second play by the Spanish poet-dramatist to become an opera for Schwetzingen, after Wolfgang Fortner's "Don Perlimplin" in 1962.

Concurrently, from May 14 to June 13, the company is presenting Leher's operation "Paganial," in a production by the Basisan State Theoder of Karlevshe, conducted by Charles Schnitzler.

The plot is an allegory concerning marital incompatability of an older shoemaker and his young wife. Plagued by nosy neighbor women and meddling officials, the relationship of the conforming cobbler and his independent minded spouse, who is unable to express her love for him visibly, is made so miserable that he leaves, a theme reminiscent of Richard Strauss "Die Fran Ohne Schatten." Left to her own resources, she opens an inn and becomes increasingly the target for the townspeople's envy, imagining her hus-band to have been a paragon of manly virtues until he returns, dis-guised as a proppeteer, and the old disillusionment sets in again.

Kirov Dancers Offer Gogol Ballet

International Herald Tribune

DARIS - One of the attractions of the Kirov Ballet's current season here is that it is going beyond the classics to offer a glimpse of the company's con-temporary repertory, the first sample being "Revi-zor," a "choreographic transcription" of Gogol's "The Inspector General" by Oleg Vinogradov, the Leningrad troupe's director and chief choreographer.

Gogol's tale of official small-town corruption and the confusion that is sown by the arrival of an im-pecunious imposter who is mistaken for a high offi-cial is doubtless just as timely as it was in czarist days, and Vinogradov has cleverly and colorfully, staged it in a mixture of classical ballet vocabulary and satiric and grotesque pantomime.

The first of the two acts shows the provincial characters clambering over one another in their preposenterous struggle for local power, while several of the principal figures — the governor, the judge, the postal director — are briefly but deftly characterized in swift choreographic strokes. Vinogradov cites Chaplin and Fellini as models, and Western dance followers may also see touches of Roland Petit or even Maurice Béjart in the group movements.

The second act belongs mainly to the imposter Khlestakov, acted and danced by Vadim Guliayev with insouciant aplomb and vertiginous light-footedwith insolicant aplomb and vertiginous light-roctedness as he drolly takes advantage of the avaricious yokels. Natalya Bolshakova as the governor's connivingly amorous daughter, and Ninella Kurgapkina and Nikolai Kovmir as her parents, were admirable foils. Vinogradov came up with some amusing visual solutions for the more "verbal" elements of the story, with the hards part and letters actually recept.

11 Deputy Premiers

TOKYO -- China carried ont a major government reshuffle Tuesday in which 11 of the nation's 13 deputy premiers lost their titles, the Chinese news agency reported. In a dispatch monitored here, the agency said that Wan Li and Yao Yilin were the only two depu-ty premiers to retain their posts in the streamlining move approved by the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress, China's parliament.

However, most of the former deputy premiers will retain their government posts. Among them are Foreign Minister Huang Hua, Defense Minister Geng Biao, and Chen Muhau, the minister of foreign economic relations and trade, Zhao Zhiyang will remain as premier, the agency said.

To Trim Bureaucracy

The reshuffle, which has been expected for several weeks, was the second stage of a major drive by the deputy party chairman, Deng Kisoping, to trim the nation's bu-reaucracy, starting from the upper echelons of government.

Of the 11 men who lost their posts as deputy premiers, nine were appointed to a newly-created panel of 10 state councilors, the agency said. It did not explain the panel's function, but based on previous statements by Chinese lead-ers, the panel would act in an advisory capacity.

On March 8, the Standing Committee approved the merger of 12 ministries and commissions into six new, centralized bodies as part of an effort to overhaul the economic system.

The agency said that in the second phase of the reshuffle, the State Council reduced 13 other ministries and commissions to seven. With one new commission created, the net overall reduction is from the original 52 to 41.

Dome Optimistic on Beaufort Output

OTTAWA—Oil production in the Beaufort Sea will eventually range between 250,000 and 500,000 barrels a day, a level that could return Canada to the role of a net exporter of crude, Bill Richards, the president of Dome Petroleum said Tuesday. He was speaking to reporters after testifying to a parliamentary committee on energy legislation.

His assessment contrasts with that of Energy Minister Marc Lalonde, who last week forecast that Beaufort Sea output would be between 150,000 and 200,000 barrels per day by 1990. Mr. Richards told the committee that the Tarsuit N-44 well, in which Dome has a working nerest. "looks to be the best in the Beaufort and one of the best ever in

Gulf Resources Managers Face Battle

NEW YORK — Alan E. Clore, a British investor, has said he and 11 other investors will wage a proxy fight against the management of Gulf Resources & Chemical and will stand for election in opposition to the company's official slate.

In a proxy to shareholders Mr. Clore said he had "serious concern about the operating record and future prospects" of the coal, natural gas, and chemicals company, Mr. Clore's move Monday was expected. Gulf Resources' annualmeeting is on May 11. The group said it held 15.6 percent Gulf Resources' shares.

NCC Energy Ends Bid for Simplicity

NEW YORK - NCC Energy, the British oil and investment company, has ended a takeover effort for Simplicity Pattern, the large sewing patterns producer, and is seeking to sell its 20-percent interes

Plans for a merger were first announced a year ago. In March, Simplicity halted the merger and said it would concentrate on making acquisitions in domestic and foreign oil and gas operations.

Union to Continue Shale Oil Project

LOS ANGELES - Union Oil of California will continue its oil shale project at Parachute, Colo., chairman Fred T. Hartley said, despite Exxon's decision to withdraw from the similar Colony project in Colorado because of escalating costs.

Seagram Official Joins Du Pont Board

WILMINGTON, Del. - Du Pont said Harold Fieldsteel, executive vice president for administration and finance and controller of Seagram, which owns 20 percent of Du Pont stock, has been elected to the board. William Laird, Hugh R. Sharp Jr., and Howard Swank retired from the board Monday, making 29 members instead of 31.

Seagram, a distiller, acquired its Du Pont stake when the two companies were competing last summer to take over Conoco, Seagram ex-changed the Conoco shares it acquired during the battle for Du Pont

Anderson Rejects Bid by Charter

LONDON — Anderson Strathchyde has rejected a takeover offer by Charter Consolidated, saying its business would be best served by re-

Charter is offering 135 pence cash per share for Anderson, valuing it at £64 million. It said it already has a 28.4 percent stake.

RCA Expects Better Results in 1982

NEW YORK - RCA expects 1982 results to be far better than those of 1981, chairman Thornton F. Bradshaw said Tuesday in remarks prepared for delivery to the annual meeting. But he said RCA's performance will depend in large measure on the economy. In 1981 the company earned $54 million on sales of $8 billion.

Commenting on speculation about a possible takeover and subsequent sell-off of RCA assets, Mr. Bradshaw said such a move would not be in the interests of the shareholders and would be resisted. Bendix recently acquired 5.5 million RCA shares.

Volkswagen of America Cuts Prices

TROY, Mich. - Volkswagen of America said Tuesday it will immediately reduce prices of new cars and trucks by up to 9.4 percent until October, end of the model year. A spokesman said the company acted to "reduce dealer stocks and improve sales."

Saudis Purchase Stake In W. German Group

By John Tagliabue New York Times Service

BONN — A Saudi Arabian group, in a major Arab entry into West European industry, has acquired a 17.87 percent share of IBH Holding, the West German construction machine group that is partly owned by General Motors. The acquisition will make the Saudis and General Motors the largest IBH shareholders, with equal participation. The deal with the Sandis is part of an IBH pro-gram to raise $64.6 million in new equity capital.

Horst-Dieter Esch, the IBH chairman, said Monday that the Dallah Establishment, a Saudi Arabian industrial group involved in the construction and entertainment industries, would acquire the IBH stock for $38.7 million. Dal-iah has revenue of $1 billion. Mr. Esch said, "We need the liquidity that will come with this investment to increase the working capital of several of our subsidiaries and to reduce our bank borrowings, thus entting our interest."

He said that Sheik Saleh al-Kamel, Dallah's principal shareholder, would represent the Sandis on the IBH policy-setting board.

GM Stake Reduced

The Arab group will purchase newly issued shares that will result in a reduction of GM's stake in the West German company to 17.87, percent — equal to Dallah's holdpercent — equal to Dallah's hold-ing — from 19.8 percent.

TBH acquired Terex, a General randomag's neadquarters, to qualify for state and to complete a $66.8 million project to rebuild Hanomag's obsolete plants.

Motors subsidiary that makes heavy construction vehicles, in 1980 in a deal that ultimately made General Motors the biggest IBH shareholder, with the 19.8 percent stake

IBH grew rapidly after it was founded in 1975 by Mr. Esch, 39, a flamboyant businessman who forged the company into the world's third-largest manufacturer of construction machinery, after Caterpillar Tractor and Komatsu. He did it largely by acquiring 11 European and U.S. construction machine companies during a slump in the industry.

Earlier this year, Mr. Esch said that nonconsolidated group revenues increased 15.6 percent in 1981, to $1.06 billion, from 1980's level IBM publishes no carriers. level IBH publishes no earnings figures, but Mr. Esch said the company broke even in 1981, a result similar to its 1980 performance.

The company's profitability was hurt last year by the continuing construction industry slump in Europe and the United States, and by igh bank lending costs. IBH also suffered from efforts to turn around Hanomag, the money-los-ing German construction machine company it had acquired from Massey-Ferguson in 1980.

Essentially, the capital injection helps IBH fulfill financing provisions of a complex credit guarantee arrangement it signed recently with political leaders in Hannover, Hanomag's headquarters, to quali

BUSINESS NEWS BRIEFS Liberty Changes Fabric of Strategy

By Sandra Salmans New York Times Service

LONDON - If Harrods is an institution, it is often said here, then Liberty is a monument. But while that description of this city's other large department store may befit its Tudor-style facade and high-priced gentility, it is not always the best way for a retailer to sell goods.

Tourists "just come in here as though it was the Tower of London," David Pike remarked ruefully upon his appointment last year as chairman of Liberty & Co. "They don't buy."

Since his appointment as the first chairman from outside the founding Liberty family, Mr. Pike, 63, who was hired as an assistant accountant by Liberty in 1951, has been trying to patch the cracks in the monument by expanding into the United States, retrenching elsewhere and selling

Despite a hard year for retailers generally - and a Christmas-sea Despite a hard year for retailers generally — and a Christmas-season blizzard, followed by a rail strike that worsened the situation — his efforts appear to be paying nff. Last Wednesday, the company reported a profit of £328,000 for the fiscal year ended last Jan. 31, compared with £52,000 for the previous year.

Sales, which had slipped to £21 million, rose 13 percent, to £24 million.

Dutch Cuts

One of the main reasons for Liberty's restored health was the major surgery performed by Mr. Pike on the company's business in the Netherlands, where the recession had produced a pool of red ink.

The chairman shut down five branches within Dutch-owned department stores, leaving only two Liberty stores and 25 percent of the original staff. "We've got the knife out," Mr. Pike said in a recent interview. "I'm afraid there's a bit of the accountant at work."

But in other territories, Liberty is proving expansionist. The company, which opened its first store in the United States in 1978 — a small store on East 60th Street within hailing distance of Bloomingdale's — has initiated a full-scale invasion of America. It opened a store in Philadelphia last November and another in Washington in December. It plans to have a store in Chicago's exclusive Water Tower section and a shop in Columbus, Ohio, by September, and it is looking closely at

and a snop in Columbus, Onio, by September, and it is looking closely at Boston, Dallas, Kansas City, Mo., and San Francisco.

At the same time, it is warning department stores such as Macy's, which originally stocked only a handful of Liberty's gift items, that they may have to add clothing, labrics and other products if they want to continue. "We're more ambitious now." said Geoffrey Phillips, president of Liberty U.S.A. in New York.

The Home Fires

Britain still accounts for three-quarters of the company's revenue, however, and it is here that Liberty is trying to change its image. Historically, the company has been identified with Britain's upper class, a relationship that proved profitable as long as that class spent freely.

But as those customers have aged, and their purses became pinched, many limited themselves to more modest purchases, such as the ubiqui-tous Liberty scarf, knotted at the chin.

The goal now, Mr. Pike said, is to "popularize the name of Liberty. without debasing it." To do so, it is spending more money on promotion, including a mail order catalogue — a reversion to a Liberty practice of 50 years ago — and, in an extraordinary step, television advertising. This approach is evidently working. Liberty's British retail sales, from its London store as well as its 18 branches throughout the country, rose percent last year, Mr. Pike said. Founded in 1875 by Arthur Lasenby Liberty as an importer of fine cashmere from India, cotton from the Sudan, silk from China and Japan and rugs from Persia, the store quickly won a following among the aesthetes of the day who favored the uncorseted, pre-Raphaelite look

Liberty firmly secured its place in the nation's heart when, in the mid-1920s, the company built its extraordinary, block-long Elizabethan building on Regent Street, just off Oxford Circus. The building, constructed of the timber and oak from two old battleships, is resplendent outside with the borrowed coats of arms of Henry VIII's six wives and Queen Elizabeth 1, and is topped by a weathervane that is a gilded copper model of the Mayflower. Inside, the store is a rambling series of galleries, four stories high, grouped around three wells that evoke the courtyards of old English inns.

Under its present chairman, Liberty has been refurbishing its valuable real estate, with the idea of renting 4,000 square feet to other high-toned

And there are other breaks with tradition. In one sense, Liberty is still family company, with 60 percent of its shares owned by the founder's descendants, and three of the six board members from the family.

But Arthur Stewart-Liberty, the great-nephew of the founder, retired from the chairman's post last year and, although his two sons are involved in the company, one as a merchandise manager and the other running the company's diminished business in the Netherlands, they are not beirs apparent to Mr. Pike.

Accordingly, Mr. Pike has begun to market the company to investors as well as to shoppers. This fiscal year's results will be publicized, not in the customary slim, cream-colored brochure, but in a glossy, picturefilled annual report with a cover in the royal purple that, like the olive green of Harrods, has become Liberty's trademark. "Obviously, one day, not too distant, this will have to cease being a family company," Mr. Pike said. "Things have changed."

Gold Declines $20 an Ounce

Resters

LONDON — The price of gold fell by more than $20 a sunce here Tuesday, closing at $341.75 an ounce after the preholiday weekend close on Fri-day of $362 an ounce.

Dealers said business was moderate, with investors generally uncertain after the sharp fall in New York futures Fri-day. They said there is still con-siderable buying pressure and that the Falklands crisis could potentially push values up to around $370 an ounce. On New York's Comex Tuesday, gold was trading at $341.20.

American Motors Pact With UAW Threatened By Local's Rejection

DETROIT - American Motors Corp.'s tentative pact with the United Auto Workers, which called for employees to defer some wage increases, appeared to be unraveling Tuesday.

The UAW said Tuesday that the agreement had been shelved for the time being because a union lo-cal in Toledo, Ohio, narrowly re-

The local's rejection of the pact Monday came after two other UAW locals accepted it. UAW officials said they needed approval from all three in order to imple-ment the $115-million investment

It was the first setback to the series of agreements that the UAW negotiated this year under which the union granted various concessions designed to revive the ailing U.S. auto industry. The new UAW contracts with General Motors and Ford provided for savings over 30 months of $2.5 billion and $1 billion respectively.

Two Approvals

The union planned to convene its 42-member AMC council "in the near future" to discuss the defeat, the union's secretary-treasur-er, Raymond Majerus said, AMC spokesmen said company and union officials were to meet Tuesday to discuss their next step.

The contract calls for workers to invest future wage boosts and benefits in AMC's new-product development program. A local in Kenosha, Wis., approved the accord by a 52-percent margin last week. A third local, in Milwaukee, had approved the contract by an 89-percent margin April 24.

The agreement asked AMC's 14,000 U.S. workers to give up six cost-of-living allowance increases in return for prepaid legal services, a commitment not to play off one local against another for work, strengthened benefits for laid-off workers and a promise to resume all the paid days off and pay raises before the contract expires in 1985.

Analysts said that the only real savings to AMC, which lost $136.6 million last year and $51 million in the first quarter of this year, would come from the fact that by borrowing from workers, AMC would be paying only 10 percent interest, rather than competitive rates. They estimated the real saving at about $20 million.

French auto company Renault has a 46-percent stake in AMC. April Production

Meanwhile, AMC reported Tnesday that domestic car sales in April fell 27 percent to 12,878 cars from the year-earlier month. It said in the year to date, car sales declined 34 percent to 41,981 from the year-ago period, U.S. Jeep sales declined 12 percent in April to 5.040.

Car sales for the Big Three U.S. automakers fell 5.1 percent to the end of April from the year-earlier period, and sales for the month were down 4.9 percent, they said

General Motors reported the only sales boost in the final 10 days of April — 1.7 percent — while Ford car sales dropped 4.4 percent at the end of April compared with a year ago and Chrysler sales plummeted 34 percent.

For the month, GM car sales were down 0.7 percent. Ford sales were off 8.1 percent, and Chrysler was down 17.7 percent compared with April, 1981, the antomakers

EEC Nations Fail to Agree On Steel Cuts

By Roger Cohen

BRUSSELS - EEC countries failed Tuesday to agree on extend-ing mandatory production cuts for the steel industry until the end of 1983, diplomatic sources said.

Despite a plea from Etienne Da-vignon, EEC Commission industrial commissioner, for a quick agreement extending controls for 18 months, industry ministers re-mained divided over the duration and application of any new quotas, they said.

A statement issued after a meet-ing of EEC industry ministers said they agreed in principle on the need for a one-year extension beginning July 1.

The EEC Commission had asked for the extension of its pow-er to impose the cuts, which were due to be abolished at the end of June, in view of depressed demand that cost major EEC producers an estimated $2 billion last year. "It is blocked for today," a West German spokesman said of specific quotas, adding that West German Economics Minister Otto Lambsdorff had insisted that any extension of the obligatory cuts should be for one year only and should apply only to products currently covered.

The agreement in principle on the need to extend the cuts leaves discussion of the details of the extension, including its length and the precise range of products covered, to a meeting scheduled for next month.

Such a delay was not likely to please Mr. Davignon, who was quoted by one senior diplomat Tuesday as telling the meeting that a full agreement by the month was essential. Orders for steel products are generally placed several weeks in advance, and Mr. Davignon said uncertainty over the future of the output cuts could create problems in the market.

The emergency cuts in produc-tion, first imposed in October, 1980, are designed to avert chaos in an EEC steel market where poor demand since 1974 in major steelusing industries has threatened the existence of several companies.

Notice merely is he hog-fat and horny, but he has been manipulated by the crafts Mrs. Fanshawe into playing Father Christmas" for the coming holidaying he has been caught in yet another life. OKAY: The sudden shift in mood toward the end of this fust novel from the comic to the dramatic is rather disconcerting, and its ultimate resolution is not entirely persuasive. But who on earth could possibly care? he has been caught in yet another libs dinous indiscretion by a prominent "A Good Man in Africa" is a work of such sustained hilarity, inventiveness and high spirits that its author surely can be forgiven a minor lapse or two. Indeed, for giving us his central character, Morgan Leafy, William politician and is, as a direct result, being blackmailed by him; and he has been put in charge of disposing of the large, decomposing body of a womaniw whose manner of death has put the natives in fear for their lives. Boyd should be granted an indulgence of a half-dozen minor lapses in each of his next five novels. Leafy, first sec-retary at the British Commission in the provincial capital of Nkongsamba in the African country of Kinjanja, is a 34-year-old hedonist who is plagued, in approximately equal measure, by ravenous appetites on the one hand and punishment for including them on the other: "There were two good things about living in Africa, he told nings about living in Africa, he told himself convivially; just two. Beer and sex. Sex and beer. . . They were as reliable as anything in this dreadful country, he thought, and, he reflected snugly, feeling more buoyant and pleased with himself all of a sudden, he was certainly getting enough of both."

Witch Hazel

As for the romantic side of things, Morgan has been victimized by his African mistress, Hazel, who in the Amesa misuess. Hazel, who in the course of their frolics has presented him with a dose of the clap. This proves terribly inconvenient when, in a moment of unexpected passion, he is set upon by the ravishing Priscilla Fanshawe, daughter of the commissioner and owner of a set of dumning. sioner and owner of a set of danning-ly firm breasts; in a moment of high honor, Morgan turns aside her panthonor, Morgan turns aside her panting onslaught lest he pass along to her his memento of pleasures elsewhere—and in so doing sufficiently offends her that she rushes into the arms of the newly arrived Dickie Dalmire, Morgan's subordinate.

This is but a part of what Morgan construes to be a cruel and dreadful brought face to face, as it were, with andry, matter-of-fact doctor named in Murray whose unflappable competitionee and poise Morgan comes to door. test with a hurning, surging passionsol.

"He decided it must be something to."

Amid all these tribulations he is

"He decided it must be something to?" do with the way that Murray implicitly set himself in judgment—as a sorted of human rebuke, a living breathing, admonition to others. That wash it, Morgan thought; when you mein Murray all the shabby moral evasions of that made up your life, all the gray zones of questionable behavior, there whole sad compendium of self-regardaring acts suddenly stood up to be recounted. But what was worse, what was particularly galling about Murray was that, having somehow brought this effect about, he didn't really seemed. to care any further, wasn't especially. surprised to find out that there were Yet there is more to Marray than

It is a 3 mark of Boyd's maturity and skill that as he plays Morgan and Murray off against each other at first, then gradnen ally and subtly alters the relationship: so that each man becomes something. more than, and different from, what, the reader initially expected. Boyd understands the complexities of character and relationships to an unusual degree — especially for one who has yet to turn 30 — and he makes the encounter between these two men one of genuine significance.

But the serious aspects of "A Good Man in Africa," though they indeed exist, take the back seat to its comedy " exist take the back seat to its comedy."

This is a wildly funny novel, rich in witty prose and raucous incidents. A picnic that Morgan and Priscilla take by a river is hilarious enough, but it is actually exceeded by a climactic scene in which the unexpected arrival of a poet named Greg Bilbow deliciously complicates an already outrageous situation. William Boyd knows exactly what he is doing and he mills it off what he is doing and he pulls it off brilliantly; "A Good Man in Africa"; is, without qualification, a delight.

from the Churchill Downs backstretch, oot a creature was stirring.

As he spoke, Gregson peered every so often through the slanting morning sun at the colt that had paid $44.40, the highest-priced Derby winner (21 to 1) since Proud Clarion in 1967 (30 to 1).

"I thought he'd be about 14 or 15 to 1," the trainer was saying now. "The track handicapper had bim at 10 to 1 but I think he made the morning line before the post positions were drawn. I don't bet hut Arthur Hancock had $100 on him, I don't know what Mr. Peters had on him.

But the two co-owners, Arthur Hancock and Leone J. Peters, won't be able to bet on Gato del Sol in the Preakness at Pimlico oo May 15. On Monday the colt was shipped to Belmoot Park to prepare instead for the third leg of the Triple Crown.

'l have nothing against the Preakness, it's a great race," the trainer said. "But the Preakness just isn't meant to be with this horse. This horse was trained and prepared for the Kentucky Derby, to have him dead fit for the Kentucky Derby, and win, lose or draw, to skip the Preakness and go for the Belmont. It's unfortunate that it cheats the public of a possi-hle Triple Crown, but it would he abusive to this horse to do that Gregson, commendably, has put his sense of duty to the horse ahead of his sense of history. Without the Derby winner in the Preakness, a Triple Crown winner is not possible this year.

But at a mile and three-sixteenths, the Preakness is more of a speed P. Mickro, McWilliams (6), Scorrer (7) and T. Pena, W.—P. Mickro, 1-2 t.—Solomon, 1-3 and a quarter or the Belmoot Mrs.—Michrott, Weshington (2).

likely to win the Preakness, especially with Linkage (who beat him in the Blue Grass) expected to run there, but he probably will be fa-vored to win the Belmont three weeks later, on June 5.

Plea for Patience

"To judge this horse, I think you should wait until the end of the year," Gregson said. "What if he wins the Derby and the Belmont, and beats older horses in the fall races? Let's make an analysis of him at the end of the year. Remember that this is a horse we plan to race as a 4-year-old, too. We feel he's a horse that will improve with age, a handicap horse." Two other Derby winners in recent years spurned the Preakness, Tomy Lee in 1959 and Swaps in

"Tomy Lee won the Blue Grass," the trainer said. "Swaps didn't run in it, but if a horse runs in the Blue Grass and the Derby, like Gato has, the Preakness is a tough race only two weeks later. I'd like to know how many horses ran in the Blue Grass and then the three Triple Crown races. North-ern Dancer is one, but he went wrong in the Belmont." Gregson mentioned that Gato del Sol might run in the Travers Stakes at Saratoga in August, pos-sibly against Timely Writer, who was the early Derby favorite until he required emergency abdominal

"Gato might go for the Arc de Triomphe in Paris in October," he said. "Don't throw that out, it might happen. If he runs in the Travers, it won't be just to put him up against Timely Writer or any other horse. I don't think about defeating this horse or that horse. You pick out races that come at the right time for your horse, and you show up. Whoever else shows up, fine."

Gregson had never saddled a Derby starter until he walked over to the paddock Saturday from the barn area; he had never even attended a Derby.
"Gato is a beautifully mannered horse, a healthy horse," he said.

glancing over to where Linda Smithwick, an exercise rider, was letting the colt nibble grass. There he is, a docile, unexcitable horse. I'd never hring a nervous horse to the Derby, oever. Well, you should never say never in this business. But a Derby horse has to be a good shipper and he has to be able to handle the crowd. The crowd is a big factor here. So is the paddock with that many horses in the race. I think a third of the field was compromised by that scene in Gregson was annoved at the commotion that a horse had been subjected to in getting from the barn area to the track and then to the paddock behind the old elubhouse with its twin spires.

the paddock, but Gato stayed

"When you leave the barn, you've got to weave your way through cars and then the people close in to form a walkway that the horse barely fits in," he said. "That's oot right. They should keep the people back, give the horse room. Once you're on the track, you can walk in the middle to keep away from the crowd. But it's still oot a good situation." Even though Gato del Sol had not won any of his four previous races as a 3-year-old, Gregson knew last year that he had a Derby contender. "When he won the Del Mar Fu-turity," the trainer said, "I decided to point him for the Derby, and that's what we did."

2 Giants Anxious for Summer

By Rob Hughes ternational Herold Tribune

LONDON -- In a sport in which the goal-scorer is king, destiny is preparing two young giants of that breed for extraordinary events.

Come high summer, Paolo Rossi and Justin Fashanu, two ntterly cootrasting but intriguing individuals, will have experienced what may prove to be the emotional peaks of their lifetimes.

Rossi's story is the simpler in that it is bound, inevitably, with the ingrained Italian characteristic of placing the nation's entire hopes, fears and strategy at one man's feet. Before Rossi it was Luigi Riva, a goal-scorer on whom the Italian complex was so obsessively focused that a camp follower at the 1970 World Cup comment-ed: "You could kill Gigi, and still everyone would pass the ball to

After Gigi, the ball went to Rossi. But for two years, two barren, often goalless years, the passes have gone to no one. For Paolo Rossi, despite his protestations of complete innocence, was suspended for two years for his alleged part in the 1980 betting and bribery scandal.

Italy slumped. The team beat some insignificant opposition to qualify for the World Cup this lune, but always it was a nation in waiting. Waiting to restore the idolatry of a oever forgotten finishing talent. It was as if the peo-ple believed no one would score his goals. And they seldom did.

He even transferred, from Perugia to Italy's most wealthy club, Juventus, in a £3-million deal. He trained twice weekly, and the na-tion was kept informed of his lonely vigil, his undiminished touch. And, in the inimitable Italian way, his initial three-year hanishment was tampered with until the date of April 30, 1982, became its end.

Just in time for the chosen son of Italian soccer to be restored, fit and fresh, to the national colors for the World Cup. The final, nag-ging question — Could Paolo rek-indle his scoring genius in time? — was answered in less than 48 hours after his liberation.

Early in his first game for Jnventus against Udinese on Sunday Rossi rose to meet a ball in the air. Straight and true and unfailing, like a missile guided by computer, he found the oet. And when he later created a goal for Antonio Cahrini and Juventus ran out 5-1 winners to take the leadership of the Italian championship with two games to play, the crumpled selfbelief of a craven soccer nation began its resurrection. The end of the beginning of Rossi's return, except to say that Juventus attempted to secure his fame for next season by signing last week two wonderful creators - Michel Platini of France and Zbigniew Boniek of sured for England under-21 centerforward Justin Fashanu. He has scored a mere four goals in 30 games since his £1-million transfer to Nottingham Forest - none since November - and has been dropped from the team and declared open to any purchaser. There is no stampede to Nottingham's salestoom

Yet in human terms, Justin's immer may be more fulfilled than Rossi's. Fashanu may have lost his touch in front of goal, but as a budding columnist who knows how to tell a good story be writes the following in the English soccer magazine "Shoot": "I'm planning the trip of a life-time this summer ... To find my long lost dad. "Eighteen years ago, when I was a three-year-old toddler, my father walked out on my mother. He has never been seen by us since that fateful day. I spent some time at a Dr. Barnardo's home until a lovely couple in East Anglia shouldered the responsibility of hringing me

Now, like Alex Haley, author the smash television series "Roots" who traced his ancestors in Africa, I plan to trek to Nigeria for a reunion with my dad.

"The summit meeting between dad's a tribal leader — and Justin Fashanu of Nomingham Forest and England under-21, promises to be just as momentous a any tearjerking reunions in "Roots". Every man has a right to know his father, and, although I shall probably never understand why mine chose to abandon us and leave mum to struggle on her own, I harbor no grudges."

The young Fashanu goes on to say that his father runs a law firm near Lagos and that a Nigerian newspaper sported the link. "Good investigative reporting," comments Justin. Good lad, Justin, and good

If only we could leave things there. Alas, the taste that all of us we for soccer has been wretchedly poisoned again. Last weekend, as UEFA fined Aston Villa and Anderlecht £14,000 and £5,000 for the violence of hooligans at their European cup semifinal in Brussels, a young Londoner, aged 24 and in the prime of life, was stabbed to death outside the stadium after Arsenal's game against West

What can we say that we have not attempted to put into words before? Only that, for good's sake, stop heaping all the blame on soccer and start repairing the fabric of family and social living that Justin Fashanu is travelling thousands of miles to get close to this

Keeping Up Relations

By Russell Baker

NEW YORK — Americans doo't seem to have as many relatives as they used to. I think it's because relatives have been given a bad reputation in recent years. There have been too many relative jokes, too many books about relatives being a drag, too many television comedies about relatives heing deadbeats. moochers and half-wits. Since I happen to be a relative myself. I'm often hurt by this treatment. Recently I visited a man I'd always thought was my frieod. "We've got a real Baker treat oo TV tonight," he said. Know what he thought would be "a real treat"?

"On the Waterfront," with that unforgivable scene in the car where Marlon Brando shows up his hig brother Rod Steiger as a first-class rat, a fink for the mob who would destroy his kid brother's dreams for a few cheap

In the crucial scene his wife said to their child, "Aren't you glad we're a ooe-child family, Robin? ft means you'll never have to be a big

I feel sorry for little Robin enter-iog a life where relatives will be scarcer than mules who know how to use a finger bowl. I've always had scores of relatives and been glad of it, and not just hecause they have to invite you to wedding parties and lend you $10 when

One of the nicest things about relatives is that you can't be hlamed for choosing them, the way you're always being faulted for your terrible choice of friends. If you had a frieod who dropped by during a dull dinner party and told the guests they'd have more fun if they took their clothes off, every-body would say you had terrible taste in friends. An uncle making the same suggestion is a different case. At worst the guests will say, "He may give dull dinner parties but he certainly has interesting relatives."

With plenty of relatives you are always up to the minute on all the bad news, too. Wheo Aunt Miran-da died and left me out of her will,

I didn't have to wait for weeks to learn that my dream of huying a small island in the Aegean had been dashed.

When the phone rang that night I could hear the uodertaker still rustling in the background while Cousin Estes was saying, "Heard the news? Aunt Miranda just died and left you out of her will."

I had to take the chone off the hook to prevent 40 other relatives from finishing as also-rans in the race to hring me the happy news. With a lot of relatives - I had 347 at last count — you oot only have people like Aunt Miranda; that is, rich relatives who enjoy making you feel poor. You're al-most certain to have some poor relatives who make you feel rich.

Once a year, I like to visit a gathering of poor relatives wearing my Madisoo Avenue suit and enjoy the spectacle of gills going green with envy when I give one of them a fiver and suggest he bring back a six-pack of beer.

Blood kinship of course occa-sionally tempts them to impu-dence. Hear Aunt Miranda cut you out of her will," one may say, affecting that sly know-it-all look which poor relatives assume to be their rightful mess of pottage.

My pleasure in relatives is not to be spoiled so easily though. Brushing imaginary lint from my cuff links—I always wear French cuffs to these family gatherings—I say, "As a matter of fact, I'm having my lawyers take another look at

What does it matter that I have no will, much less lawyers to look at it? These poor relatives will learn that soon enough from rela-uves slightly richer than I, but by then I shall he gooe, having enjoyed my huge family immensely.

Thanks to the wantoo enlightenment which afflicts our age, the country is packed with dreary masses determined to approve of everybody who doeso't show symptoms of homicidal bestiality. Only with plenty of relatives can you still taste the pleasures of being disapproved of for every-thing from the shape of your neckue to the way you complain about the televised football roaring away through Thanksgiving dinner. It's nice to have somebody left to disapprove of you, and relatives will do the joh for you. Relatives may not be a lot of fun, but that's all right. They care.

Czeslaw Milosz

A Poet in Exile 2 Years After the Nobel: 'How Can You Analyze a Destiny?'

By Lynn Darling Washington Post Service

ASHINGTON - He is a wolf, hunting history. haunted by the past. A poet in exile, a singer of songs, a stranger. Perhaps poets are always strangers in their way, wild in their sorrows, wary of the world. It is not his fault. Czeslaw Milosz smiles, curling his thin straight lips. "My desire was to be as nor-mal a human being as possible," he says, and his accent caresses the words. "But everything fell apart and I became an abnormal human being. It was my destiny. How can you analyze a destiny?"

He is 71, still handsome. His dark hair comes to a point on a vast plain of forehead, his cavernous eyes are shielded by thick eyebrows that move in counterpoint to his other features.

Two years ago, Milosz won the Nobel Prize, but still he shakes

his head at how difficult it is to communicate. "I write my poetry only in Polish," he says. "It is a matter of principle; I think poet-ry should be written in the language of one's childhood." But more important, there is the problem of time and of place. He comes from a country where history has been victious, annihilating. He lives in a coun-try that is still obstinately young. "For somebody who has certain experiences, as we had in Poland, the divisions are infinitely more tragic. There is a certain line dividing us from you, there are cer-tain things that escape comprehension, they have to be touched to be understood."

And so his poetry is dark and difficult, although he says this too is not what he intended. "My poetry is dictated by peculiar historical tragedies in Europe, and many times it was forced upon me. Maybe I didn't want to write about very sad things. But there was no choice."

He fought in the resistance in World War II and later entered the Polish diplomatic corps, serving for a time as cultural attaché Washington But Stalinism sickened him and he lest Poland in 1951 for Paris. In 1960, he returned to the United States as a professor of Slavic literature at the University of California at Berkeley.

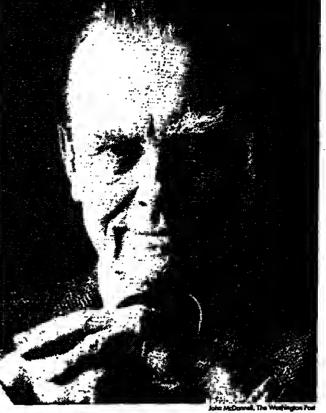

He grew up in Vilnius, in what was then a rare and lovely city, in what is oow the Lithuanian Soviet Socialist Republic. It was, he says, a city of severe winters and steep hills, scarred by fires and the erosion of each successive era. He talks of the old castle, the mosaic of languages and cultures, the medieval Jewish quarter —he cherishes the city, the complexity of meaning it holds for him, the way in which history was visible there. "I have," he says, "a kind of intimate relationship with the

Which makes it difficult to think of Milosz living in Califor-nia. Yes, he says, there is a cer-tain dissonance, and tells of a colleague at Berkeley who is writing a history of Marin County.
"We are talking about a few decades, beginning with the end of the 18th century, the missions, the destruction of the missions, the rise of a new capitalist economy, the Indians, and the reasons why they died out — all of this incredibly burnan history, but nobody knows about it, there is oo visible trace, no record. Each historical phase, one crases another, nobody nodces the interre-

What is missing, he is asked, when the past is treated so caval-ictly? "It depends," he says, "on the historical and poliocal con-text. People in Poland are very attached to the past, but the meaning of the past changes ac-cording to circumstance. I think in the case of a foreign occupa-tion, the past in America would acquire more meaning." Even after 30 years, he maintains an exile's distance. In the beginning. "I was convinced my career as a poet was finished, that I would lose my touch with people, with the language. So I was desperate." But the writing returned, the exile's isolation forcing out the words.

ry. It was very emotional. If you have the ruins of a cas-tie in a city, Milosz explains, if you are surrounded by the legends of the past, your imagina-tion has an anchor. If the points of reference are lacking, you have to create everything in yourself.

Czeslaw Miłosz: "I became an abnormal human being."

"California is a general abstraction. It is nowhere. I feel that California is a symbolic character for the whole planet. In a way. California forced me to explore my own past. It was a kind of Proustian operation; constant-ly men and women from the past visit my dreams." Milosz returned to Poland last summer, after an absence of 30 years. His work, proscribed for so long, was being published again, and the minister of culture gave him a reception in the summer palace. The irony of the honor is observed for one moment and then he talks of Lech Walesa. "He's a wonderful man," he says. "I admire him profoundly. We paid compliments to each other, but they were genuine. I told him that I considered him my leader. He said that he had gone to jail because of my poet-

The fear was palpable in Poland. "It was an intropid 16 months of constant struggle of people against their own fear," he said, "Some couldn't take it; I knew of cases of suicides from the constant fear." And yet they continue. "For some complex reasons, there is a whole basic belief in the goodness of this world, that the good must prevail, that justice must persist, that a miracle might happen."

He stands at the podium and reads his poems in English and Polish to the audience that has overflowed the auditorium at the Library of Congress here, invoking the universe, trying to touch the souls of men, a brave and lonely effort that leaves him oddly vulnerable. He reads from one of his poems, "Ars Poetica?": The purpose of poetry is to remind how difficult it is to remain just one person, for our house is open, there are no keys in the doors, and invisible guests come in and out at will What I'm saying here is not, I agree, poetry.

PEOPLE: Dear Ann. Van Locy Column Dear Ann: Quit Recycling Ann Landers says she saw nothing wrong with recycling old letters in ber worldwide advice column, but now that a small-town publisher objects she'll stop the practice. Barbara Sancken, a reporter for the Pontiac (III.) Daily Leader, was compiling the paper's "Remember" column — a daily digest of newspaper excerpts from years past — when she found letters dating back to 1966 that seemed very familiar. Over a period of several months, she came up with more than 30 letters from 1966 and 1967 that ran again in 1981 and 1982. She showed the rerun letters to the newspaper's publisher, who called Landers. The columnist admitted the letters were old material, but said she believed the letters "sharply illustrated certain points of continuing concern to today's readers." Landers said later in a written statement that she reus old letters occasionally, but added, "It had not occurred to me that this would be considered deceptive. The letters are relevant and it's the quality of the answer that counts. Now that I find there is disapproval from one publisher, I will discontinue this immediately. Will discontinue this immediately. Her column appears in about 1,000 newspapers around the world and is read by an estimated 70 million people daily. Ann Landers is the pen name of Esther Panline Lederer. Her twin, Panline

Alex Haley, author of "Roots," has been inducted into the Academy of the Kingdom of Morocco, only the third American so honored by Morocco's top academic institution.

Eather Phillips, using the pen name Abigail Van Buren, writes the syn-dicated column "Dear Ahby."

The Nepal Ministry of Tourism said Eduard Myslovsky, 44, of Moscow, and Vladimir S. Balyberdin, 32, of Leningrad, have climbed Mount Everest, the first time Russians have climbed the 29,028-foot peak.

Singer Andrea McArdie, 18, the original Annie in the Broadway musical, has been removed as the star of "The Threepenny Opera" after less than a week of previews in Boston. Her father said she left the show because of contract dif-ferences, but the producers said they removed her from the role of Polly Peachum because "she wasn't able to handle the part." Undersundy Maryann Plansett, a veteran actress and singer with experience in 50 plays, took the role in the English-language adaptation of Kunt Well's "Die Dreigroschen Oper." McArdle opened on Broad-way in "Annie" in 1977 and played the role in London a year

Former President Jimmy Carter will speak on the same subject to other branches of the club in Stockholm on May 6; in Copen-hagen, where the club was found-ed, on May 10; in Paris on May II, and in Helsinki on May 13. In Paris, he will also be paying a courtesy call to French President François Mitterrand.

The Los Angeles city attorney says Bart Reynolds won't be charged in an incident in which the actor allegedly roughed up a free-lance photographer who was trying to snap his picture. "One has a right to use a reasonable amount of force to remove a trespasser, said a statement issued by City Attorney Ira Reiner. Photographer Russell Turiak, 37, had told police that Reynolds pummeled him April 26 outside the actor's West Los Angeles home. A police report said that when Reynolds arrived at his house with actress Lounie An-derson, the photographer hopped out of his car and began snapping pictures. Turiak contended Rey-nolds smacked him in the face and threw his camera. But Reiner's statement said his office had received a previous complaint involving the photographer "who has become violent in the pursuit
